

Preparing the Portfolio

Weekly Report 10/29/18 - 11/4/18

This week involved preparation for the upcoming Research presentation. The first step was completing the portfolio, this action lead to the discovery of a missing assessment. This particular discovery caused a great amount of concern seeing as it was brought to life thursday the first, the day in which Mr. Spiece told us he would be out of town and unable to respond to emails. These factors caused a frantic scurry to find the lost article within google drive. The first checkpoint was the assessments folder in which the discovery that the assessment had been in fact written over and not lost was made; this meant that it had been a huge mistake made personally and one in which to learn from. The second checkpoint was google classroom where hopefully the document had been saved in its original form, however, this was not the case and thus again frantic panicking soon took over. Instead, a calm demeanor about the situation, a demeanor which will be helpful throughout the ISM journey. This problem caused a lost of time which could have been directed towards other more beneficial works such as the presentation itself and other essays for different classes, however, it is now known to simply look at the situation from an outside perspective and see who is most likely able to help. Seeing as mistakes are bound to occur, it will be important to approach them calmly in order to create the most logical and straightforward solution to ease the situation.
